PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS & CAREER PATHS WILL RETAIN & ATTRACT WORKERS

THE FACTS

- The workforce is expected to double in size under the NDIS. We need to make sure that there are good career paths so that current workers stay in the sector and new workers are attracted to it.
- Disability workers need to have a say in setting professional standards so that skills and experience continue to be properly recognised into the future.
- Decisions are constantly made behind closed doors about what the standards should be in the sector by governments and employers without the involvement of workers.

“I want to have a rewarding career. That means better recognition of the skills and experience I bring to my job. By being in the ASU, I am part of the ACCDP which will help make that happen.”

Rachel, Disability Support Worker, Sydney

- The ASU has set up the Australian College of Community and Disability Practitioners (ACCDP) so that members get a say about what the minimum qualifications and standards should be in disability support and to ensure that there are good career opportunities in the sector. Learn more here: www.accdp.org.au
